ABOUT THE LITTLE LONDON WINDS Community Band Does Education Outreach Every Spring

What We Do The Little London Winds is devoted to spreading the joy and love of music education among local, student musicians. Each spring semester is dedicated to joint concerts and clinics with area school bands. As students, there is always band at school or college but many children don't know that there are opportunities to play your musical instrument as an adult. These joint concerts not only give music students a chance to hear more challenging music but inspire them to keep learning more about music.

What the Community Can Do Our band members love nothing more than to see a child's face light up with excitement to see an adult playing the same instrument or to hear incredible music. We sincerely hope that our community joins us in supporting area music students by attending our joint concerts. Not only does it give the students encouragement, but also an opportunity to play in front of a larger audience.

As with all of our concerts, these performances are all free and open to the public. To help, community members can donate to The Little London Winds so we can continue our Music Education Series. On a national level, community members can donate to the Save the Music Foundation, a non-profit organization dedicated to restoring music programs in America's public schools.

Host The Little London Winds at Your School To host The Little London Winds for a concert or clinic, interested band directors can contact our President, Shelly Radin at littlelondonwinds@radins.us.
